The plan commission has two mega-roles: plan preparation and plan implementation.

A good plan commission takes the time and exhibits the expertise to make informed land use recommendations to busy elected officials. To get started, the elected local government body creates the plan commission, and then appoints plan commissioners from among the citizenry. Ultimately, the elected body is responsible not only for adopting and implementing plans, but for the preparedness of the plan commission it creates.

Join us at this FREE program and learn how to smoothly, effectively start-up the new plan commission and tune-up the existing one.
