

ANNOUNCEMENT:

Graduate Assistantships Available for 2012-2013

The school of Health of Promotion and Human Development is offering graduate assistantships for the 2012-2013 academic year. Below are details and application information.

Compensation: The assistantships are a half-time (20 hrs/wk) position that pay approximately $11,200 and includes the state health insurance package.

Who can apply: Current and prospective students in the Human & Community Resources or Nutritional Sciences master's degree programs

Job responsibilities: Graduate assistants serve HPHD in a variety of capacities including to enhance the delivery of HPHD programs, instruction, and scholarly activities. Graduate assistants can serve as a research assistant to a faculty member, teach or assist in teaching undergraduate courses, support department assessment and accreditation efforts, sustain and further HPHD collaborations in the community (e.g., PEP grant, Greenhouse Project), assist faculty in developing new or enhancing existing programs (e.g., Gesell, Employee Wellness).

Benefits to student: Graduate assistants gain vital skills and professional development experiences that provide them with a real world view into the jobs their master's degree will lead. Working in community and research projects builds skills in technical and professional writing, research skills useful in grant writing and program assessment, managing programs, developing new programs, building collaborations, teaching experience, among other. Out-of-state tuition remission is also available.

To apply: Email the following items to awetter@uwsp.edu before 5pm, April 6, 2012.

1. Resume or CV
2. Brief letter of interest (no more than 1 page, single spaced) that delineates the strengths and abilities you bring to this position and how the opportunities this position offers will assist in your professional development.

Competitive review of applications will take place in April for appointments to be announced in May of 2012 for the academic years 2012-2013.

For any additional information, please contact awetter@uwsp.edu.