LAND RECOGNITION

With profound reflection, we acknowledge that the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point exists upon land inhabited by the original indigenous people of this area, including but not limited to, the Menominee, Ho-Chunk, Ojibwe, and the many other nations and groups that predate colonial borders. While this state institution has a rich history, for countless generations these lands were home to this diverse group of Native American people. Beginning with colonization and continuing for centuries, Native American people were forcibly removed from their homelands to foreign and inhospitable lands. This brought sickness, trauma, and loss in many forms, including the mass grave site of indigenous people that our administrative building sits upon.

In reverence to the truth, we acknowledge this occurred. We recognize the responsibility to support Native people, communities, and world views, so all might benefit from their teachings and hard-fought lessons. We also recognize that the generations of Native American communities, their cultures, and their knowledge systems shaped the land in a sustainable way that allows us to continue to enjoy its gifts today. For this, we are truly grateful.

Together we hope to find ways to move forward while acknowledging and respecting this history. In partnership with the Native American Center, we continue to explore durable and meaningful ways of recognizing, supporting, and advocating for the sovereignty of all tribal nations, their historical communities, the modern representations, the lives of Native Americans who live here now, and the ancestors beneath us. We commit to working together to honor the past, be intentional in the present, and to build our future with truth.
